

Open Arms

Beautiful beams of a million tiny stars fill up the night sky
But before your eyes you see nothing but a black slate tearing you from the beauty of the universe
Pointing out the constellations, but your eyes are covered by countless troubles
Polaris, you are, the brightest star that shines upon my world, creating a constellation of cherished memories
A bright burning ball of fire at the centre of the universe cannot keep your daylights long enough to play harmonious tunes of life and drown out the noise
You are in a solar eclipse, forever in a tight darkness of fear and worries
As meteor showers make impacts on your planet I see nothing but beams of light
I can only provide shelter from the storms of life that I knew were coming
You fell out of orbit
Broke your connection with the sun and surroundings
Lost in an open space of darkness fell off the beaten path
But never will you stop orbiting in my universe
Because we walk on the Milky Way together
After being dragged through the hallways of darkness, watching stars burn out before our eyes
Break the rings from around your neck of Saturn, as they will suffocate you
For my shoulder can bear more than each beam of torturing starlight that impairs your vision
Connect the dots of each constellation, for I will always be your guide of the night sky
Make your wish upon a shooting star as one never did discover every corner of the universe, wish to the endless possibilities
Every corner of my universe leads me back to you
My arms are your protection, an atmosphere that will prevent you from humanity's cruelty
Gravity will keep you in line when you fall astray
If one element is missing everything else suddenly has no purpose
My world cannot turn
Counting my stars as I do the planets, never underestimate the importance of your role in this ever changing universe
You are a strengthening force of gravity that keeps me grounded and my mind from wandering to the clouds that cover the beautiful potential of this life
I'll keep you in this life as long as the sun needs the moon
And the darkness will forever be accompanied by stars
Fear not, for if you do not bounce back, we will fall together
