A Sector Work Plan to Advance the Social and Economic Contribution of Community Organizations in Newfoundland and Labrador
What is the Community Sector Work Plan?

As part of The Way Forward, the Provincial Government has partnered with high-potential sectors, under the direction of the Cabinet Committee on Jobs, to support economic growth and foster job creation. As part of this work, the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Community Sector Council Newfoundland and Labrador have led the development of the Community Sector Work Plan. The Work Plan includes actions that each of a number of public and community sector partners will take, individually and jointly, to achieve the collective goal of recognizing and strengthening the social and economic contributions of the community sector.

In Newfoundland and Labrador, community sector organizations are woven into every facet of daily life. Every day, we all benefit from their work. Thousands of different organizations in virtually every community provide everything from mental health supports to community theatre to school meal programs. They are active in areas that range from seniors and youth programs, mental health, advocacy, sports and recreation, maintaining trails, tourism, arts, culture and heritage, employment training and support, and housing and homelessness to environmental protection, early childhood, health promotion, poverty reduction... and social justice. Community organizations create and feed community vitality, generate new ideas, develop local talent, help attract investment and grow business, and generally make the province a great place to live, go to school, operate a business, work, and raise a family. Like the public and private sectors, the community sector is often the impetus for economic and regional growth, and is central to social and economic progress. This joint Work Plan reflects the Provincial Government's recognition of, commitment to, and appreciation for our community-based organizations and volunteers, as well as their combined social and economic impact.

The community sector – often called the voluntary, non-profit sector, or social profit sector – comprises about 3,700 legally incorporated organizations and hundreds of informal groups, which collectively engage close to 200,000 board leaders and volunteers. When considering the importance of volunteers to the sector alongside a general decline in the number of hours that individuals spend volunteering, it is vital that the Community Sector Work Plan look at creative and innovative approaches to strengthening the sector.

For the purposes of the Community Sector Work Plan, a ‘community sector organization’ is defined as any registered charity or non-profit organization that is run by a volunteer board of directors whose members receive no compensation for their role on the board. Generally, our focus is with community-based organizations to the exclusion of quasi-governmental charities and registered non-profits such as hospitals, public post-secondary institutions, airport authorities, school boards and regional health authorities.
Vision for the Newfoundland and Labrador Community Sector

Together, we will pursue opportunities that strengthen the economic contributions of the community sector and remove barriers that prevent the community sector from reaching its full potential. Our collaborative actions will foster the conditions necessary for vibrant community organizations that contribute to the economic and social fabric of Newfoundland and Labrador.
Work Plan Objectives

This Work Plan involves researching the direct and indirect employment impacts of the community sector on the provincial economy. The community sector supplies approximately 16,000 jobs to the provincial economy and is clearly significant to the economy. Through this collaborative Work Plan, we will promote the sector’s importance to all Newfoundlanders and Labradorians and take actions to help the sector achieve its full potential. Realizing this potential includes reaching the following growth targets by 2024:

- Increasing the number of people employed in the community sector; and
- Creating high-profile partnerships between the community, public and/or private sectors.

By the Sector for the Sector

This Work Plan can truly be called a community sector work plan because it was developed in close collaboration with community sector partners, led by the Community Sector Council Newfoundland and Labrador. In order to inform the direction of the Work Plan, a Steering Committee comprising representatives from a number of community sector organizations, as well as officials from a wide range of provincial and federal government departments and post-secondary institutions, was assembled. The Steering Committee identified the key issues facing the sector, as well as the main opportunities for moving the sector forward in this province – issues and opportunities that revolve around:

• The capacity of organizations to be resilient and sustainable, particularly in relation to government programs designed to help those organizations fulfill their mandates in support of key social and economic goals;

• The ability of community sector organizations to attract, retain and develop a talented workforce – both paid and volunteer – particularly in light of the province’s changing demographic make-up;

• The ability of the community sector to promote and position itself as an employer of choice, as an economic engine and as a driver of social change, while dispelling myths within the public and private sectors and across society in general; and

• The untapped potential of more frequent and more innovative partnerships, both within the community sector and between the community, private and public sectors.
The work of the Steering Committee was then used to inform an extensive series of public and stakeholder engagement sessions across the province to learn more about the challenges that community sector organizations, their employees and their volunteers face in carrying out their very important work, as well as the opportunities to advance shared goals. Between October and November 2018, 11 engagement sessions were held in nine regions. Over 275 participants, from more than 70 communities, spoke passionately and knowledgeably about various matters related to: funding parameters; the lack of information and data about the sector’s presence, impact and contribution; the training, skills and professional development needs of the sector; its capacity for sound governance and financial management; and its access to government resources and timely information. Engagement participants also spoke about the value of greater visibility and recognition for their sector and the opportunity to network and strike meaningful partnerships with other organizations, particularly at the regional level.

This Community Sector Work Plan directly reflects and responds to what was heard from community sector organizations and their paid and unpaid workers, and was developed by the Steering Committee co-led by the Community Sector Council Newfoundland and Labrador.
The community sector is central to social and economic progress in Newfoundland and Labrador. The sector’s role in social development in the province is well-documented and understood. However, the same cannot be said for the economic contributions of the community sector. At the outset of this process, four hypotheses about the community sector’s importance in economic terms were developed:

- The community sector generates economic activity through its operations, purchasing and staffing;
- The community sector seeds economic development by directly generating economic activity;
- The community sector is a primary employer in many communities; and
- The community sector delivers services that make communities attractive places to live, and therefore it plays a direct role in attracting and retaining workers, particularly in rural areas.
Through the public and stakeholder engagement process, these hypotheses were not only tested – they were validated. In every region visited, participants demonstrated how their organizations exchange goods and services, hire and train workers, support and drive partnerships to advance local, regional and provincial goals, and deliver programs and services that attract skilled workers, businesses and investment to their regions.

Women play a particularly important role in the community sector's impact. While more comprehensive research is required to truly understand the role of gender provincially, in 2015, the Community Sector Council Newfoundland and Labrador and Memorial University's Collaborative Applied Research in Economics initiative partnered on a study of the economic contributions of community sector organizations in the St. John's region. Data from that study noted that women comprised 53.9 per cent of boards and almost 70 per cent of community sector staff. Throughout the history of our province, women have often been the driving force behind community-led and grassroots initiatives that contribute to the sustainability and resiliency of communities. Measures to increase the recognition of the economic contributions of the community sector and to improve the growth of community organizations ultimately support women and their families to continue to thrive in their communities. This will have significant impacts not only for those women, but also for their communities. Simply put, measures that support the community sector support communities and support women.

Community-driven solutions and new modes of employment at a local level are part of a shifting way of thinking about how our economy could be further developed. When local groups generate activity through social enterprise, the profits typically are directed at local benefit. Newfoundland and Labrador has a growing social enterprise sector of non-profit organizations that produce services and sales in the marketplace to create blended social and economic value. They range widely in size, from fish plants to thrift stores to cafés, and are a big part of our economic future. With an enabling environment, Newfoundland and Labrador has an opportunity to become a truly innovative jurisdiction. This will involve greater understanding about synergies between the private and non-profit sectors. It will also entail advancing the sector's particular value in the social and economic sustainability of our province.
Together, community organizations, post-secondary institutions and the Provincial Government, with input from federal representatives, have identified key challenges and opportunities related to the economic contributions of the community sector. We will work together to deliver better services for community organizations, to address issues related to human resources and demographics, to raise awareness and increase public appreciation of the work of the community sector, and to improve partnerships and collaboration within the sector and with the public and private sectors. What follows are the actions we will take together to accelerate growth in the community sector in Newfoundland and Labrador.

Human Resources and Demographics

The community sector is unique as it is comprised of both an unpaid and a paid workforce, where volunteers govern and manage the sector in tandem with paid employees. As recruitment and retention are frequently a challenge, leaders in community organizations wish to enhance and strengthen their organizations’ capacity to attract and maintain a competent labour force with the right skill sets to work as effectively and efficiently as possible. Continuance and succession planning in the community sector workforce are paramount to attaining organizational sustainability, particularly in rural areas and smaller organizations. The following actions are designed to help community sector organizations address key human resource-related challenges, especially in light of a changing demographic make-up in the province.
